VIN DE LIQUEURS

Vin de Liqueurs are made and enjoyed throughout Europe. In general, they are fruity yet structured and balanced with acid, mildly nutty and rich of body, and they are very food-friendly.

Vin de Liqueur is a blend of juice and eau de vie aged together.
Many regions in France produce their own prized versions:

Champagne - Ratafia

Historically, “ratafia” was any drink consumed when ratifying an agreement or treaty. Modern ratafia’s aromatic creaminess is still a wonderful way to seal a deal or end a meal.

Champagne Geoffroy Ratafia de Champagne $16

Cognac - Pineau des Charentes

In 1589, Pineau des Charentes was discovered by accident when a farmer filled a presumably empty barrel with grape must. It turned out that this barrel contained some unaged Cognac and several years later, when the barrel was opened, the beautiful blend was discovered, drunk, and adored.

Gilles Brisson Pineau des Charentes Blanc $12

Pineau des Charentes Rastignac $12

Gascony – Floc

In 1954, winemaker Henri Lamor inspired by the beverage’s aromatic nature coined the name “Floc de Gascogne,” inspired by the Occitan language phrase “lou floc” or “bouquet of flowers.”

Chateau de Leberon Vin Muté De Gascogne $24

Normandy - Pommeau

Traditionally, Norman farmers would keep their best apple juices and preserve them with Calvados to drink year-round. For centuries, only the Norman farmers and their neighbors were able to enjoy this beverage due to an obscure law that forbid its sale, until the regulation was repealed in 1981.

ABSINTHE

In 1792, Pierre Ordinaire, a French doctor living in Switzerland, first invented absinthe as a medical elixir. In 1797, Major Dubied bought Dr. Ordinaire's recipe and began commercial production of the spirit with his son-in-law, Henri-Louis Pernod, in Val-de-Travers, Switzerland. In 1805, with entrepreneurial spirit, Pernod moved production to larger facility across the border to Pontarlier, France. Though Pernod only distilled some 16 liters of absinthe in his first year, the business and the spirit soon proved a success. At the height of absinthe's popularity, over thirty-six million liters were consumed in France annually, and there were over 30,000 absinthe cafes in Paris alone. Following nearly a century long ban, legal absinthe returned to Val de Travers, Pontarlier, and the world in the early 21st Century. From the Alps to the Rockies to the Cascade Mountains quality absinthes are now being distilled and enjoyed.

Mirabelle's absinthe selections will be served with classic, Parisian service one ounce of the absinthe of your choice, a sugar cube perched atop a gold Toulouse Lautrec absinthe spoon slowly dissolved by water, drip by drip, from our absinthe fountain, until an approximate 3:1 water to absinthe ratio has been achieved.

This gradual, controlled process allows for the absinthe to properly bloom and release its full aromatics.
